Neighbors 2 Sorority Rising

Sometimes you just need a good (or a bad) laugh. Neighbors 2 fits that bill. This is some pretty politically incorrect but outrageous comedy from the latest pairing of slapstick perfect Seth Rogen and Zac Efron. Efron proves once again that he doesn't mind making fun of his over-the-top good looks. I can't give away the plot, the title says it all. College girls who don't want to go wild takeover the house next door to neighbors Rogen and wife, who are expanding their family in more ways than expected.

This is not one of those talk-about-it-afterward movies. It is a laugh your whatever off and just be silly and raunchy for a little while because that's what these movies are all about. There is one scene that if you don't laugh, you don't have a sense of humor. If you like movies like The Hangover, then catch Neighbors 2 and have a ball.

The acting is pretty lame, but it is supposed to be. It is a goof, tongue in cheek, mindless entertainment designed to offend. Neighbors 2 is a nice break from the usual seriousness. If you have had a week filled with drama, trauma and other stress, and you liked Bad Grandpa, leave your decorum at the door. This is not a movie that is going to do anything more than it was designed to—crack you up. You know the guilty pleasure movie where you laugh because you're not supposed to and in spite of your good upbringing.

Neighbors 2 is the reason why movie theaters are dark. So you can anonymously enjoy silly outings like this one. I give this one three golden tickets.
